

Hot Bike Magazine – The D&D Bob Cat pipe delivered the best all-around power, comes with complete heat shields and was the 2nd lowest price in the test.

TECH

D&D EXHAUST

D&D Exhaust is based in Ft. Worth, Texas, and has been churning out pipes since the '70s. The D&D 2-into-1 Bob Cat system uses their new Concentric Flow Baffle system that was designed in conjunction with the Engineering Dept. at the University of Texas, Arlington. Said to improve tone, reduce bark, and increase power the D&D does have a unique sound. The system is black coated with an option of a black, aluminum or carbon fiber sleeve on the muffler. With full heat shields, something fairly rare in this test, the D&D weighed 24 pounds and lean angle was compromised a little. Honestly this pipe surprised us a bit, there was nothing extraordinary about the look or design that indicated that it would make the best all around power of the bunch, but that's exactly what it did! The head pipes on the Bob Cat system are a true step header design and that probably accounted for its strong showing. The D&D was also the second lowest price in this test.